Elizabeth Monroe

Vocalist

Elizabeth Monroe is a jazz vocalist drawn to the sound and spirit of the Great American Songbook. With a genuine love for the music and the singers who shaped it, she brings a timeless sensibility to every performance.

Based in New York City and originally from Indianapolis, Elizabeth is drawn to the elegance, character, and swing of jazz music. Inspired by Anita O'Day, Peggy Lee, Julie London, Jo Stafford, and Doris Day, she has a particular appreciation for the history and era surrounding the music, from the arrangements and musicianship to the glamour and atmosphere of the great dance bands.

Elizabeth earned her Bachelor of Music in Jazz Studies from Montclair State University and has performed as both a bandleader and vocalist in intimate jazz clubs and with large jazz orchestras throughout New York City and Indianapolis. She released her debut album, Whatever Elizabeth Wants, a collection of eight jazz arrangements that showcase the repertoire she loves.

Elizabeth is thrilled to join the Glenn Miller Orchestra and to be part of an ensemble with such an important place in the history of American music. She looks forward to performing this music as it was meant to be heard: live, with a full orchestra, and with the glamour and spirit of the big band era.
